U.S. National Arboretum, Washington, DC

“Mission: The U.S. National Arboretum enhances the economic, environmental, and aesthetic value of ornamental and landscape plants through long-term, multi-disciplinary research, conservation of genetic resources, and interpretative gardens and exhibits.”

Established in 1927 by an Act of Congress, the National Arboretum is administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture’s Agricultural Research Service. It is a garden, a park, and a research institution. Its 446 acres include 9.5 miles of winding roadways. The arboretum is home to several famous collections of Azaleas, Bonsai and Penjing, dwarf conifers, ferns and much more. (Before you visit, check online to see the current visiting hours and open collections).

Like so much in Washington, DC this arboretum is free and open to the public. If you are here year-round, visit the park in the spring and the autumn. It is in spring time when the Azalea Collections display a rainbow of colors, while the rest of the plantings are beginning to bloom.

Peak bloom for Azaleas is beginning now so get out there this weekend or next to see them! Walk the grounds of the Arboretum, enjoy the incredible beauty of the various plant collections, and reflect on the importance of honoring our planet.
